About Today's Performers

Duquessa McGuffin and her daughter, Monique McGuffin Newman, have been making music together for 30 years. Duquessa studied piano and violin growing up and then majored in both at La Sierra University. Later she studied the harp with Susan McDonald at USC. She has performed with many orchestras as a violinist and as a harpist. Duquessa instilled the love of music in Monique from a very young age.

Monique studied harp and piano growing up, playing the harp with the Southern California String Choir and the Pasadena Young Musicians Orchestra. She received a scholarship to attend the USC Thornton School of Music for harp performance. While at USC she was the harpist with the USC Symphony, the YMF Debut Orchestra, and the American Youth Symphony.
